Dear Federal Energy Regulatory Committee,

As a citizen I have many concerns for the country; primary among those is concern for the security of our electrical grid. As the American public becomes increasingly aware of the risks of cyberattacks and learns that certain damage could leave blocks of the country without power for substantial periods of time, it is very important that power companies, Congress and the citizens work together to find solutions to our complex energy problems in a rapidly changing world. We also have a right to know if we are legitimately in danger so that we may prepare ourselves accordingly.

If there are, or have been, violators of the Critical Infrastructure Protection standards which put us at risk, this simply must be revealed. I understand a reasonable proposal to deal with this matter of transparency has been offered by Michael Mabee on September 3, 2019. I would ask that you embrace this proposal. The security of our nation and our people is a serious matter. The American people need to have confidence in our essential corporations and their ability to protect our critical infrastructure. This begins with transparency and creative problem-solving. Thank you.

Respectful Regards,
